The new Renault Mégane scoops Company Car of the Year award

The new Renault Mégane has won the passenger car category of the Company Car of the Year awards organised by the French magazine L'Automobile & L'Entreprise.

Renault also picked up second place in the class with the Kadjar which was ranked ahead of the third-placed Volvo XC 90.

The Renault Talisman and Renault Espace collected fourth and fifth places respectively!

Renault would like to thank the jury for having singled out the Mégane for the category win and for placing four Renault models inside the top five.

The presentation ceremony took place on Wednesday, June 29, and Renault France's Director of Special Sales Benoît Alleaume was there to receive the awards on behalf of the brand.

"We are thrilled to have been presented with these two prizes," he said. "They are rewards for two cars that have proved very popular with our customers, not only for their look, but also for their user-friendliness and cost of ownership. The new Mégane was launched at the beginning of 2016 and is an increasingly big hit with businesses. In June, it emerged as the second-best selling C-segment vehicle in France. Meanwhile, the Kadjar topped the C-segment crossover market as of end-June, with regard to both fleet sales and sales to private motorists."
